

Steps to Create a VR Headset

Follow the steps below to create the prototype of your VR Headset.

Step 1: Identifying Perspectives from Sources

- Look through the handouts of sources and decide what sources you will use as your inspiration for your images. You will need to select a minimum of 3 sources, each representing a different part of the Roman Republic.
- Then, make some notes about the perspective of each of your three sources.

Source 1: _____
Notes:

Source 2: _____
Notes:

Source 3: _____
Notes:

Step 2: Creating Images

- Create at least 3 images that the user will see when they click through the buttons on the VR headset. You can draw your own images or cut out images from the handouts. You can even create your own image by combining parts of the source images and your own drawings.
- Then, write a few sentences about each image. This description will be narrated out loud to the users as they see the image.

Image 1:

Image Description:

Image 2:

Image Description:

Image 3:

Image Description:

Step 3: Designing a Prototype of the Headset

Build a prototype to show what the VR headset will look like.

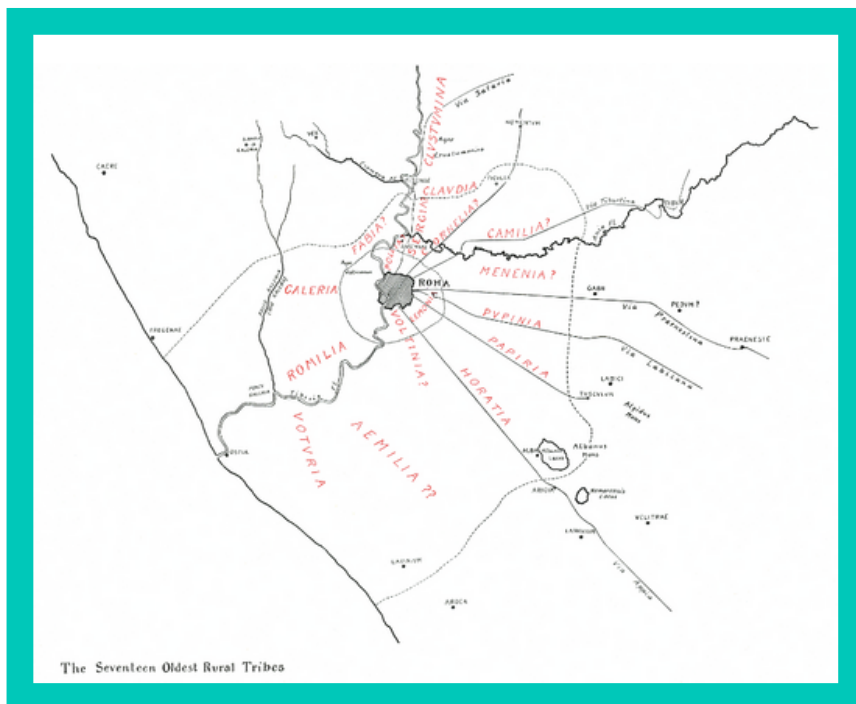

- Requirements:
  - Has a strap that will hold the headset on someone's head, like goggles.
  - Has 3 buttons on the side that someone can click to change images.
  - Is smaller than the size of a shoebox.
  - Has a logo on the side that has the name of the VR headset (which you will come up with).

Sketch your plan below:

Step 4: Gather your materials and build your prototype!

Sources to Use

This is a map showing the different tribes of ancient Rome. The members of the Assembly were made up of representatives from different tribes. This is similar to the Congressional districts of U.S. Representatives today. The citizens who were members of the assemblies had the right to vote on laws.

The senate was the central institution in Roman politics, but its formal powers were few. It did not pass legislation or appoint magistrates, for example. As a matter of formal constitutional law, the senate was mainly an advisory institution whose members received delegations, digested reports, debated, and issued decrees, which were not legally binding.<sup>10</sup> Nonetheless, in practice the senate had a considerable degree of authority during most of its existence. Over the last one hundred years of the Republic, the senate lost power to magistrates with popular followings.<sup>11</sup>

This is a paragraph from an article titled "The Constitution of the Roman Republic: A Political Economy Perspective" written by Eric A. Posner. This paragraph describes the Senate of the Roman Republic. The Senate was one of the three branches of government in ancient Rome. The U.S. government has three branches of government, which is based off of the government of Rome.

Sources to Use

This is an image of the Temple of Concord. This was a religious temple where the Senate would meet. This Temple was meant to unite the different social classes within the Roman Republic.

This is a silver coin that depicts the image of a Senator. The Senate had control over the money of the Roman Republic, and also was in charge of Rome's relationships with other countries.

Sources to Use

"Whatever the People has last ordained shall be held as binding by law."
"The penalty shall be capital punishment for a judge or arbiter legally appointed who has been found guilty of receiving a bribe for giving a decision."

These are a couple of laws from the 'Twelve Tables'. The 'Twelve Tables' contained laws drafted in ancient Rome. These laws were to be followed by everyone in Roman society. They were intended to be equally enforced among all social classes. The 'Twelve Tables' influenced the constitutions and laws of other countries, like the U.S. Bill of Rights.

This is an image of the ruins of the Roman Forum. This was an area where everyday Romans would come together for activities like elections, trials and military parades. The Senate decided to expand the Forum during the Roman Republic so that it could hold more people for assemblies and gatherings of the people. This allowed people to hear what was being discussed by the politicians.

VR Headset Example

